Case Study

Implementing a Consolidated ERP Architecture

The Challenge

A leading coffee and beverage company needed assistance creating a consolidated ERP platform. Therefore, for their corporate-wide implementation of SAP™ software they sought a partner that could help support the project and align their ERP technologies. Having previously engaged Oxford to provide subject matter experts in PeopleSoft™ software, they chose us to lead and provide consultants for their initiative. This included application development, supply chain, database management, business intelligence, and security.

The Solution

Partnering with our client's business and technology organizations to understand their objectives, we assembled a team of specialists with expertise in the following areas:

- SAP
- Oracle™ database (DBA)
- PeopleSoft
- Supply Chain
- Business Intelligence
- Security
- Enterprise Applications/Middleware

Our consulting team developed, enhanced, and executed the enterprise-wide ERP implementation. We supported a wide range of responsibilities for the platform rollout and streamlined divergent technologies.

Our client was able to produce a consolidated architecture at a reduced cost and risk.

The Result

As a direct result of the engagement, our client was able to produce a consolidated architecture at a reduced cost and risk. The new platform also enabled future development with enhanced efficiency, intelligence, security, and control performance. Since the successful completion of the project, our partnership continued to grow and expand with our client's needs. As a long-term partner, we have provided them with more than 100 consultants to date in support of their evolving technology needs.
